Maya Art

(1) The Maya cities flourished for about 700 years. During that time, the Maya created many types of art. The artwork included carvings, paintings, tapestries, ceramics, and even tiny figurines. It is believed that the art was created and appreciated by all the Maya, from the kings to common people.

(2) Maya murals have been discovered in some of the ruins. These large wall paintings show the daily life of the Maya people. There are scenes of people eating and doing daily activities. The artworks also include hieroglyphs, a writing system using pictures and symbols. The Maya may have painted artworks on paper, but that is unknown. The hot, humid weather and insects have left no traces of paper paintings.

(3) Although murals show weavers, only a very few small pieces of tapestries or other textiles have been discovered. The heat and humidity break down cloth fibers like they do paper fibers. The pieces that have been found show that the Maya were skilled at weaving. This skill has been passed down, connecting the weaving of ancient times to the weaving Maya do today.

(4) Maya made bowls, vases, and other pottery. Each piece was made by hand using clay mixed with limestone or ash from the area. The mixture was formed into jars, bowls, or other pieces of pottery. The Maya covered the pottery with minerals and water to color it before firing it or baking it. The oldest pieces are all one color, mostly black, red, or a creamy color. Over time, they created color patterns and designs. Later, the ceramics were painted. Many were painted with very detailed scenes.

(5) The Maya made tiny figurines. Some were painted. The figures likely were traded for other things. At one site, archeologists uncovered a workshop where many figurines were made. They are still studying this site to learn more.

(6) In every Maya city discovered, evidence of their art has been found. These items not only show how advanced society was but also give clues about the daily lives of the Maya people.

The Maya Cities

(1) A long time ago, the Maya lived in cities in the Yucatan peninsula. Many people who live there today are descendants of the Maya people. However, they no longer live in these ancient cities or play sports in the arenas the Maya people built. The jungle has crept in and covered the buildings they built. For people interested in this history, it can make them wonder. What were the Maya like? How do we learn about the Maya who lived in these cities? Why did they leave the cities?

(2) People have learned about the Maya by looking at the ruins of the buildings and artifacts left behind. Archeologists can learn a lot by looking at these artifacts. Some of the things left behind are large, like buildings and pyramids. Other things are smaller, like artworks and items used in everyday life. Each item, large or small, is a clue about the people and their lives.

(3) Over 40 cities have been discovered. Although each city is different, some things are alike. The cities were very organized. Buildings were usually built in line with each other with open spaces between them.

(4) Similar building types have been found in each city. For example, sports arenas have been discovered because the Maya played a game with balls that went through hoops.

(5) There is stone near Maya cities. The Maya dug up this stone, usually limestone, and used it to build the buildings. They cut the stone into large blocks and stacked the blocks. Sometimes they stacked the blocks to make huge pyramids. Many of the discovered cities have pyramids that can still be seen today.

(6) Many of the pyramids and other buildings are covered with carvings. Some of these carvings included hieroglyphs, which are pictures of objects representing words. The Maya are the only people in this part of the Americas that had developed a system of writing. These carvings tell more about how the Maya lived in these cities.

(7) As archeologists find and study more, more information about the Maya will be learned.
